Twenty Years Later, Diplomats Reflect on African Embassy Bombings

Twenty years ago, the U.S. embassies in Kenya and Tanzania fell victim to coordinated and nearly simultaneous truck bombs – later linked to Al-Qaeda. Fifty-six U.S. government employees, contractors, and family members were killed. From the ashes, countless survivors pulled together and rebuilt

On August 6, 2018 the United States Diplomacy Center commemorated the anniversary of these bombings hosted by Ambassadors Prudence Bushnell and John Lange, who respectively were in Kenya and Tanzania at the time. Public Historian Dr. Alison Mann and Associate Curator Katie Speckart appear on CSPAN’s American Artifacts Series, sharing highlights
"I’m very happy that they can be part of the Diplomacy Center"

Ambassador John Limbert is a former diplomat and American hostage during the takeover of the U.S. embassy Iran in 1979. Ambassador Limbert, and other Americans in the embassy, were captive for 14 months, and amongst other hardships, also contended with not having a change of clothes. The items he wore during the 444 days are now part of the Diplomacy Center collections, and include a pair of sandals given to him by his captors.

The support needed to make the vision of the United States Diplomacy Center a reality is based on a public-private partnership. The Department of State, representing the public sector, is providing the space, staff and security. The Diplomacy Center Foundation (DCF), a 501(c)(3) organization, is representing the private sector. DCF has raised $50 million and is working to raise the other $40 million needed to complete the project and set up the endowment necessary to maintain the collection.
