

Getting the Message

The attacks on September 11, 2001, unfolded before the eyes of the world. People watched live as the second plane hit the World Trade Center. Word of the attacks spread quickly to even the most remote locations, through broadcast media, computers, telephones, and word-of-mouth. The news coverage of the disaster elicited thousands of immediate responses, flooding U. S. embassies and consulates worldwide with letters, telegrams, e-mails, faxes, and spontaneous shrines.
